

HICKEY AND PARKMAN ARE VICTORS IN THE PRIMARY ELECTION

Thomas L. Hickey, county supervisor of the First district, was endorsed by the voters last Tuesday for re-election, winning over Fred Peterson by a vote of 3,119 to 2,810.

Harry L. Parkman, seeking re-election as a member of the assembly, received 6,837 votes, while his opponent, John W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, received 4,405 votes.

Parkman led his opponent by substantial majorities in every district of the county with the exception of Coleberd's home town of South San Francisco.

Senator Hiram W. Johnson was given the largest vote cast for any candidate by the voters of San Mateo county in Tuesday's election. Senator Johnson was given 10,096 votes, his opponent, Chas. H. Randall, receiving but 1,381.

Arthur M. Free, Republican candidate for Representative in Congress, decisively defeated Mrs. Cecelia C. Casserly, receiving nearly 4,000 more votes than were cast for Mrs. Casserly, who, however, will be the Democratic nominee, but 842 Democrats voting for Free, while 2,416 voted for Mrs. Casserly.

Supervisor John W. Poole overwhelmingly defeated John W. Morey, of Menlo Park, for the office of supervisor of the Third township. Poole was given 3,209 votes, while Morey received 1,806.

George C. Cleveland, of Watsonville, defeated State Senator M. B. Johnson, and will succeed the veteran San Mateo county man as representative of the Eleventh senatorial district, comprising the counties of San Mateo, San Benito and Santa Cruz. Cleveland carried all three counties. In San Mateo county Cleveland was given 5,246 votes, while Johnson received 4,660.

Frank T. Deasey scored a small majority over Judge Joseph S. Koford in this county, but other counties of the district have given Koford a commanding lead and insure his return to his seat as presiding justice of the District Court of Appeal.

The vote in San Mateo county was very light, many people evidently not regarding the primaries of importance enough to turn out and vote.

Semi-official returns from the 272 precincts of San Mateo county, from figures compiled in the office of County Clerk Elizabeth M. Kneese, give the following complete returns:

THIEVES GET AWAY WITH PASTOR'S CAR

While Rev. Elliott L. Fisher, the pastor of the Daly City Methodist church, was in conference last Saturday with his District Superintendent, Dr. Carl Warner, whose office is located in the Methodist Book Concern building, San Francisco, his recently purchased automobile was stolen.

The machine was recovered by the San Francisco police on Monday, but it was not in the same condition as when the pastor left it parked at the curb. The top, seats, floor boards, in fact everything that could be detached, were missing when the car was returned to Rev. Fisher.

LIGHTING OF STREETS IS BEING IMPROVED

At the regular meeting of the City Council last Monday evening all members were present, with Mayor H. H. Smith presiding.

A petition signed by many residents, asking the board to change the safety zone in front of the high school was presented and referred to the street committee for investigation.

The lighting committee reported the rearranging and installing of many street lights in several parts of our city, and instructed the city attorney to draft a resolution of instructions to the Pacific Gas and Electric Company.

This is gradually making Daly City one of the best lighted cities in San Mateo county.

The city engineer made a brief report on the paving of the City Park playgrounds.

The city attorney was instructed to draw up a legal plan of instructions and notice to Mrs. Fish, on Los Olivos avenue, regarding the condition of her property.

The engineer was ordered to draw plans for several improvements in the Vista Marina tract.

September 10 being a legal holiday, the next regular meeting of the City Council will be held on Tuesday evening, instead of Monday evening.

Bills and salaries for the month were read and ordered paid.

The Daly City Merchants' baseball team added another game to their list of victories last Sunday by defeating the Excelsior Merchants, the final score being 5 to 1. Both teams turned in a wonderful fielding game.

Daly City made 11 hits, 1 error and scored 5 runs; Excelsior, 2 hits, 1 error and 1 run. Batteries: For Daly City, Ford and Reardon; Excelsior, Cava and Sunstrom.

AGED GARDENER HANGS HIMSELF

Believed to have become mentally deranged from the effects of a long illness, Herman Waldruff, gardener for the Borel estate at San Mateo, early Sunday morning sought death by his own hand among the flowers he had nurtured for the past half century. Fellow workmen found his body hanging from a rope attached to a rafter in one of the Borel green houses. For fifty years Waldruff had been chief gardener for the Borel family. He was noted far and wide for the skill he displayed in raising rare blooms and in landscaping the spacious garden. He loved his flowers with an intense devotion, and when doctors informed him that a serious operation was the only chance of prolonging his life, he chose rather to meet death by his own hand among the flowers which represented the fruit his half century of effort. He had been ill for over three months.

Men and women of this community, read what Rodger W. Babson, the greatest business statistician in the United States, says. Mr. Babson is a man who spends all of his time investigating business and then selling his time and advice to business men. Here is what he says: "For your own sakes, for our nation's sake, let us business men get behind the churches and their ministry. Never mind if their theology seems old. mind if their rheology seems old. This only means that they were efficient they would do much more. The safety of all we have is due to the churches, even in their present inefficient state. By all that we hold dear, let us from this day give more time, money and thought to the churches of our city, for upon these the value of all we own ultimately depends."

SPECIAL SESSION OF STATE LEGISLATURE TO BEGIN TUESDAY

Governor C. C. Young and members of his administration have initiated final preparations for the meeting in special session of the state legislature at Sacramento next Tuesday, to consider a new 4 per cent net income tax on banks and business corporations.

The program, as tentatively outlined, calls for rapid-fire action, with Professor Robert M. Haig, expert analyst of the state tax commission, manning the big guns of the administration.

Professor Haig will make the main presentation of the emergency tax plan, which, it is claimed, will avert a $22,000,000 loss in state revenues, before both bodies of the legislature, sitting as a committee of the whole. The entire membership of the tax body, headed by Irving Martin, of Stockton, will be on hand to back up the findings of the tax expert.

Governor Young will fire the starter's gun for the extraordinary session at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, when he will send a special message to the lawmakers, outlining the program and the developments that invalidated the present tax on banks and intangible securities.

Ironing out objections to the emergency plan, which are predicted on the theory that revision of the state's tax system should not be taken up piecemeal, the tax commission, it is said, is prepared to "show its hand" on the program to be proposed at the January regular session of the legislature for a complete revamping of the system.

OAKLAND PREPARING FOR ADMISSION DAY

All California roads will lead to Oakland in September, the eighth, ninth and tenth, according to plans of the order of Native Sons and Native Daughters of the Golden West for its official celebration of Admission Day this year. So many parlors have promised to be active, that the traditional Native Sons parade is now planned for fourteen instead of ten divisions, the longest heretofore.

Meanwhile Oakland is being put in shape for its joyous task of serving as the carnival capital of California. An entire block in the heart of the city, recently vacated by the Southern Pacific Company, is being turned into a Joy Zone. Behind gaily painted fences, carpenters and painters are busy preparing for the carnival features.

Events slated on the program so far are as follows: Joy Zone opens September 4 and runs daily until midnight.

Native Daughters meet Saturday, September 8, in the old Scottish Rite Cathedral with all past and present grand officers present to witness the exemplification of the ritualistic work by the District Deputies of Alameda county. Other features of the day include dancing in the Municipal Auditorium arena, fireworks on Lake Merritt, a marathon race and speed boat trials, a department store tour for ladies, and the big automotive electric evening parade open to all with worthy contributions.

Sunday, the Landmarks committee will dedicate the Joaquin Miller home; many churches will hold Admission Day services; outdoor motor races will be held on Lake Merritt, and in the estuary will be held the annual regatta of the Pacific Association of Amateur Oarsmen; an All States Society picnic will be held in Mosswood park; and there will be dancing and the Joy Zone.

The official Native Sons' parade will be head of all events on Monday morning. Fifty-two San Francisco parlors alone will make up four divisions of this big parade. In the afternoon an aerial circus will appear in the sky. Band concerts, fireworks and dancing, the Joy Zone and other features will round out the day.

Seventy-five thousand persons are expected on this final day, and the number may run over a hundred thousand, it is estimated by the general committee of the order.

AERO EXPOSITION AT REDWOOD CITY

Sponsored by the Pacific Aero Club of San Francisco, the Pacific Aero Exposition, planned as a complete display of Pacific Coast aerial industries, will open September 25 on the Redwood City aviation field. It will continue to September 30.

The exposition is first on the list of the club's activities planned for the next twelve months by Captain Roy N. Francis, former chief instructor of army aviators at Kelly Field, Texas, recently elected president of the organization.

LEGION ASKS EMERGENCY APPROPRIATION FROM STATE

The California legislature will be asked by the American Legion to appropriate sufficient funds for the purchase and maintenance of a number of rolling kitchens and equipment, tents and blankets, to be placed in depots over the state geographically so that they may be made available for use in cases of emergency, such as the recent forest fires, the St. Francis dam disaster, and other catastrophes, according to State Commander Frank N. Belgrano.

The request grows out of the experience of American Legion posts which when called upon in emergencies in various counties of the state have been without equipment to care for the volunteer workers.

"Each year in each county of the state we would provide for the appointment of a state or county official with authority to incur in the name of the state of California indebtedness for rations and equipment for the rolling kitchens and for the feeding and housing of the volunteer workers until such time as the relief work is taken over by some regular organized body," Commander Belgrano says.

"We are ready for emergency service, but we should be provided with the tools to do our work," the head of the World war veterans' organization declares.

Some of the political charges that are being slung back and forth remind us strangely of the pot and the kettle.

Mace Has Long Been

Symbol of Authority

An interesting bit of ceremony takes place each day as the house of representatives convenes. A distinguished-looking individual enters the chamber and walks slowly to the front bearing aloft the mace, which the house maintains as its symbol of power. At the speaker's stand he turns to the right and fastens the staff on that side of the platform. It is an official announcement that the house of representatives is now in session and vested with the power to transact legislative business.

The mace resembles a flagpole capped by a gleaming metal eagle. Its keeper's sole duty is to appear twice on the floor of the house on days when it is in session, bringing the mace in when the body convenes, and when it adjourns, carrying it back to the office of the sergeant-at-arms with the same deliberate step.

The only time during a day of business when the mace is removed before adjournment is when the house goes into committee of the whole to consider some piece of specific legislation. When it is officially in legislative session again the mace is returned.

"Blue-Blooded" People

Favorites of Fortune

There is, of course, no "blue blood," but the term, generally used in a complimentary sense as denoting gentle birth, does really hark back to color origin. Not of blood, though. The reference is to the color of the veins.

Families who through several generations possessed sufficient wealth to enable them to escape manual work developed skins of a very fine texture, and through the latter the veins showed blue. That would be especially apparent in the hands and forearms. The skins of those who, unblest with wealth, had to work became hard, and the veins were hardly discernable.

Thus, although "blue-veined" or "fine-skinned" would have been more correct, the term "blue-blooded" came into use to denote the aristocracy, and it would seem, from old writings, that it was the popular belief that the term expressed the literal fact.—Kansas City Times.

Siamese River Gardens

In most eastern countries the rivers run low during the nonrainy period of the year, to such an extent that islands of mud and silt appear in many places. These are often cultivated by the inhabitants as vegetable gardens, says the Wide World magazine.

Little lookout sheds are constructed from which the owners keep watch of their crops. Scarcely an inch of space is wasted by these industrious folk, and several kinds of European vegetables are grown. When the river rises again, all these carefully tilled gardens disappear.

Unfulfilled Prophecy

Joseph Jefferson, celebrated actor, believed he would be remembered by posterity as a painter rather than for his stage triumphs. One day, toward the end of his life, he was showing William H. Crane—Mr. Crane relates the incident in "Footprints and Echoes"—a painting he had just finished.

"Do you know, William," he said, "I think that whatever lasting fame will be mine when I am gone, will come through my brush and not through anything I have done on the stage."

"I don't suppose," comments Crane, "anyone looks at Jefferson's paintings today, or even remembers that he was a painter."

Papal Claim Still Stands

In 1871 the Italian government absorbed as part of the territory of Italy much of the property over which the pope of Rome had exercised and claimed jurisdiction and possession. The Italian government placed to the credit of the Vatican a sum of money and certain guarantees which have not been accepted by the Roman authorities. It is said that the Italian government is anxious to adjust the matter, but so far the papal claim has not been diminished, which is temporal power or jurisdiction over the disputed territory.

Prospective Ruin

"Hey, Aaron!" called Abner Apple-dry, "where you going, all rigged out in your new suit of clothes?"

"Don't tell anybody," replied Aaron Alfred, "but I'm going to ask old man Rackett for his daughter's hand in marriage."

"H'm! Looks like a pity to ruin a new suit of clothes that way."

Unclassified

A new serial in the Woman's Home Companion is labeled "a story about the younger generation," says a contemporary editor. "But why is nothing said about any generation except the younger and the older? There ought to be a middle generation."

Martha Norelius, of New York, was re-crowned queen of the mermaids of the world when she captured the Olympic 400-meter free style swim.

Miss Alice Finkel, 20 years old, of Dubuque, Iowa, has earned the title of champion shot of fourteen central states.

Dr. Ida Mellen, of the New York Aquarium, is the only woman in the country who practices the profession of physician to fishes.

Mrs. Emma Thorsen, of Chicago, pointed her curling iron at a burglar in her home and he fled.

Fasting in a religious mania, Signorita Louisa Caltoni, of Paris, became a living skeleton and finally starved to death.

Miss Clare Harper, violinist, of Huntington, Tenn., has been awarded a scholarship by the Juillard School of Music in New York.

LOCK UP REPEATING CRIMINALS

Recently three robbers attempted to hold up a branch of an important bank in a northern California city. During the robbery one of them shot and killed the teller, who did not obey orders with sufficient alacrity to satisfy the thug.

Fortunately the three were captured when the car in which they were escaping struck a truck. And the fact appears that all of them were old offenders with continuous records of felonies on the Pacific Coast.

The record of the killer embraced an eight year sentence for robbery, an escape from prison and identification for a previous bank robbery. He was also wanted for a robbery in Los Angeles.

The second member of the trio had to his credit conviction for assault with a deadly weapon, an arrest as a bank robbery suspect, and an escape from authorities while being taken to answer for the charge.

The third thug, not to be outdone, had demonstrated his ability by an arrested for attempted burglary, a sentence on another burglary charge, an arrest for robbery, and another arrest.

Laws similar to the Baumes laws in New York would mean life imprisonment for confirmed criminals of this type, upon fourth conviction of a felony. They could not be turned loose, time after time, on a helpless public.

Let us tighten up the laws affecting criminals, rather than those affecting the home owner or lover of sports.

FACTS ABOUT THE TELEPHONE

More than 1,000,000 telephone calls a day are made in Greater Kansas City.

Telephone service between Great Britain and the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg was recently opened.

The state of Tennessee averages about 1,330,000 local telephone calls a day and 11,000 long distance calls.

There has been an increase of more than 100,000 telephones in the city of Detroit in the four years from July 1, 1924, to July 1, 1928.

Of the total of about 31,000,000 telephones in the world, approximately 25,000,000 or 80 per cent can be connected with the Bell System.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Following several months of debate as to whether the curricula of a teachers' college and of a university could be made to coincide with out detriment to either, the regents of the University of California decided affirmatively at their last meeting and voted to move the State Normal School at Los Angeles to the new university campus at Westwood Hills, in the summer of 1929.

Suits filed against the city of Los Angeles for loss of life and injuries suffered during the St. Francis Dam disaster of last March were brought to a total of almost $2,000,000 last week with the filing in Bakersfield of new damage complaints by Lillian L. Curtis, who lost her husband and two children in the flood, as well as suffering serious personal injuries.

Decision to start work on the new $2,000,000 International House financed by John D. Rockefeller Jr., on the Berkeley campus of the University of California in April, 1929, has been reached. The building will be ready for occupancy by 500 foreign and American students in August, 1930.

With the announcement it plans to establish a "super power system," the Benson Super-Power Corporation, $10,000,000 concern of Georgetown, Delaware, has entered the California field with the filing of incorporation papers at the office of the Secretary of State. Robert H. Fulton, of Los Angeles county, is named California agent and directors are given as W. H. T. Gaban, Redondo Beach, and C. W. Oliver and F. Lewis, both of England.

Eleven acres of land, the camp site of the Donner party of California pioneers at the edge of Donner Lake, together with a monument, erected in memory of the tragedy, have been turned over to the State of California by the Native Sons of the Golden West. A deed to the property, held by the organization, was handed to Assemblywoman Cora M. Woodbridge, who in turn gave it to Gov. Young.

Word was received at Alturas last week of the promotion of C. E. Rachford to the post of assistant forester of the United States. Rachford was born and reared in Modoc county, coming from an old pioneer family of that section. On the creation of the Modoc National Forest he entered the forest service as guard, serving successfully as ranger, deputy supervisor and forest supervisor. He was in charge of the Modoc National Forest in the latter capacity from 1909 till 1914, when he was placed in charge of the Santa Barbara National Forest, later serving as assistant district forester for several years in San Francisco. Rachford, in his new capacity, will have charge of grazing on the national forests of the United States.

J. L. Maddux, president of Maddux Airlines, Inc., has announced purchase of the Beacon Airways, Inc., which operates planes from San Francisco, Los Angeles and Fresno. The price was not made public. According to Maddux Fresno probably will be made the center of extensive aircraft activities in the San Joaquin Valley, adding that Grant DuBois, formerly general manager of the Beacon company, would become division manager at Fresno for the Maddux lines.

The new University of California ground school for aviators conducted by the United States Navy, has been demonstrated successful by the achievements of the first two classes to graduate from the course. The five students who took the advanced flight training this year at Sand Point with a class of fifteen from various places in the Twelfth Naval District, finished 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, in rating.

A record breaking number of counties will have exhibits at the California State Fair, September 1 to 8. Last year, which was a record-breaking fair in this respect, had 34 county exhibits. Five are added this year. The list of counties which will exhibit this year is as follows: Alameda, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Contra Costa, El Dorado, Fresno, Humboldt, Imperial, Kern, Lake, Lassen, Los Angeles, Mariposa, Mendocino, Modoc, Monterey, Napa, Orange, Placer, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Francisco, San Joaquin, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Siskiyou, Solano, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tulare, Tuolumne, Ventura and Yolo. The counties in this year which did not have 1927 exhibits are Fresno, Mariposa, Mendocino, Modoc and Sutter.

A tax of $125,000 for increased supply of water for irrigation was voted in the Corcoran Irrigation District last week by 22 for and 62 against. The amount is to be raised in three annual assessments and is spread over 51,600 acres.

One more direct route between the San Joaquin Valley and the East Bay district is provided with the reopening of the Dublin Canyon section of the Golden State Highway. The canyon road connects Alameda and San Joaquin counties.

Purchase of 60 pieces of property for $300,000 by the Southern Pacific Company for its new right-of-way through San Jose's west side was announced last week. This is one of the first steps in the railway company's $4,500,000 rerouting project.

Convict Under Death Sentence 16 Years

Phoenix, Ariz.—William Faltin, sentenced to death sixteen years ago for the murder of his roommate, near Phoenix, has had a still further stay of a month given by the state board of pardons and paroles to permit introduction of evidence in his behalf. He had been ordered to the gallows a number of times and was to have been hanged recently after appeal to the Supreme court had failed.

Some of the long interim since his crime has been spent in the state insane asylum, while he had a degree of reprieve during two years in which Arizona had no capital punishment. He appeared to have been forgotten after his return to the state prison from the insane asylum until lawyers, in his behalf, sought liberation on habeas corpus. Then it was discovered that the sentence of death still is in effect.

MADMAN SHOTS DOWN TEN TOTS

Lures Them to Death in Hills as a Game.

Paris.—A modern Spanish version of the Pied Piper legend comes from a village near Tarragona where a twenty-six-year-old crazy boy lured away ten children and shot them to death among the hills. The piper himself was later tracked down and shot by gendarmes.

Jose Marinat was the lunatic's name. Somewhere he procured a rifle and enlisted the little ones of the village in a troop that was to follow him away while he hunted pigeons.

He left the village with a half-dozen little boys and girls in tow and picked up a few others on the way. The ragged company of small adventurers with the mentally clouded Jose at their head disappeared among the low hills, laughing and leaping, all excitement and anticipation.

When they reached what was to be their camping place there were no pigeons to hunt. And in some way the crazy man's mind substituted children for birds as the game to be brought down.

From the disposition of the bodies it was plain that he killed the first child by surprise, and that the rest, attempting to flee, were hunted down one by one, and shot either while running or were stalked and killed while in hiding.

When he had killed all the tots who had followed him into the country, Jose found his hunting impulse still unsatisfied. He left the little valley and prowled among the farms. In the courtyard of one he shot a woman at work.

A neighbor, attracted by the cries, was wounded by the last shot in the lunatic's weapon. Jose seized an ax and decapitated the wounded man.

A raging savage now, Jose went home for more ammunition. When his mother tried to stop him he felled her with the rifle.

The sight of his mother lying prostrate struck him with a strange new terror and he threw down his gun and stumbled away in the darkness.

Gendarmes took up the pursuit. It was two days before he was run to earth and shot.

Gives Bandits Shoes, but Fails to Kick In

Kansas City, Mo.—Now comes Alva Goshorn, student of ledgerman and likely contender for the honors of Houdini, Thurston, Kellar and the rest who charged $2 a seat for many years to prove that the hand is quicker than the eye.

Goshorn bears the distinction of having been forced into an alley by two holdup men, robbed of his shoes, 30 cents, his trousers, and saving $4 he was carrying.

He reported to police that he saw the two men approaching near his home early in the morning and just had time to stick the $41 in bills in his shoe before the command of "hands up" was heard. He was forced into an alley and ordered to take off his shoes and trousers.

Now for an ordinary man this would have spelled disaster, but not for Goshorn.

As he removed the shoe doing temporary duty as a safety deposit vault he executed one of those "twists of the wrist" magicians utilize. The $41 landed in a trash heap.

Later as he trekked home in his unmentionables, tightly clutching the money, he reaffirmed faith in the old axiom that he who laughs gets laughed at.

Blazing Man Perishes Before Crowded Cafe

Bordeaux.—Inhabitants of the hamlet of Saint-Sernin were awestruck at the sight of a man in flames marching through the main street for two blocks, falling dead before the terrace of a crowded cafe. The suicide was a Spaniard named Feliciano Blas, who, after purchasing a quart of wood alcohol, drank a pint of the liquid, soaked his body in the remaining pint, and calmly ignited himself. Blas had told the mayor that he was desperate because of family troubles.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

LUCKY FLOWERS

Now the rainbow fairies and the flowers were talking. Others could never have heard them talking.

Rainbow Fairies Live in Rainbows.

They live in them as we live in houses, and some live in the green part, some in the golden stripes and some in the red stripes.

There was a great deal of lovely moss, and neither the flowers nor the moss seemed to mind the rushing waters which ran so wildly past them and over them and about them.

But the flowers which were talking to the rainbow fairies were back of the falls, on the rocks and in the tiny crevices.

"People like to come down here, don't they?" asked the flowers. "We can understand how they want to see it all."

"But oh, rainbow fairies, could we help but stay and see this glory?"

"Could we leave when all around us are such great and mighty dashing waters, and beautiful rainbows in which you live, all joined together in great half circles and then bending down to kiss the sparkling water?"

"Could we leave all that, rainbow fairies? You are here always, always, because here the mist and the sunshine are chatting most of the time."

"We like to see you and to watch you smile in your glorious, brilliant way."

"They may think we're brave, they may! The people say as they pass us: 'Oh, how can those little white flowers stand all that rushing water over them? We should think they couldn't stick on.'"

"Yes, they may say that, but oh, who thinks about bravery when there is great, great beauty to be seen?"

"We're friends of the great waterfalls, of the sunshine, of the sparkling jewels made by the two jewelers, Sun and Water."

"We're lucky flowers, that is what we think."

Monkey Sobbed

A monkey incident that might make one suspect that perhaps Darwin was right after all is told by Martin Johnson, the famous camera explorer in the Delineator.

"Once," he writes, "while we were watching them on a clear afternoon near sunset we suddenly startled one of the old females who had been prinking herself off to one side. With a scream of fear she dashed off followed by all the rest loudly complaining at the disturbance. One little fellow, too young to run fast, was left behind in the stampede. Hoping to catch him for a pet I ran after him. He glanced over his shoulder, squealing with terror, as he saw me overtaking him. Suddenly he decided it was no use, he didn't have a chance to escape. He stopped, lay down on the rock and covered his eyes with his tiny hands. Trembling all over he lay there sobbing like a child and waited for the end. The little fellow acted exactly as if he knew I were going to kill him, and couldn't bear to see my hand uplifted to strike."

"I picked the poor little thing up. His heart was going like a trip-hammer. I suppose he was surprised to find that he was not yet hurt. He moved his hand a bit from one eye and peered at me. The sight of my face so close was too much. He pressed his hand quickly back and cried out in desperation. When I found I couldn't soothe him I carefully set him down and backed off. Again he peeked at me from behind one hand. He gave a sort of gasp as if he didn't believe his eyes. He jerked both hands down. Yes, both eyes told him I was too far away to grab him. He moved first one foot, then another. Both worked all right. With a yell he turned and ran. At this moment a fuzzy face peeked around one of the rocks about fifty feet ahead. When the baby reached this point a body followed the head, apparently the mother, for the little one I had released hopped aboard her back and rode happily away to tell his playmates of his frightful adventure with a giant."

SPONGE CAKES

The lightness and delicacy of texture of sponge cakes make them especially well liked. Such cakes are appropriate to serve with cooling drinks and icy desserts.

In all cake-making the best of materials should be used, but especially with sponge cake. A fine granulated sugar, not powdered, makes the best texture; if coarse granulated sugar is used the cake will be coarse grained; if powdered sugar, it will make a paste when the eggs are added. Pastry flour is always to be preferred when making any kind of cake, and especially with a cake that depends upon its texture and lightness for its attractiveness, as does the sponge cake.

We desire to have fresh eggs for all cakes, but we must remember that eggs but a day or two old will not beat up as light as those three days' or a week old.

For flavoring, lemon rind and juice seem to be the favorite. The acid acts on the albumen of the egg and coagulates it, which aids in the lightness of the cake. Many like a bit of mace or nutmeg together with the grated rind of orange or lemon for flavor.

The jelly roll is one of the most attractive and delicious of sponge cakes. One needs to handle them with care to have a shapely cake. If baking powder is used in a sponge cake the lemon juice is not used. Here is a recipe out of the ordinary:

Golden Glow Angel Cake.—Beat the yolks of five eggs to a stiff froth, then add one and three-fourths cupfuls of sugar (granulated) sifted three times; beat all to a light cream in which no grains of sugar are seen. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of ten eggs beaten stiff with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla and the same of lemon extract with a pinch of salt. Fold in one and one-fourth cupfuls of pastry flour sifted four times and bake in a tube pan 45 minutes.

Sponge Jelly Roll.—Sift one cupful of flour, add one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt; sift once more. Break three eggs into a mixing bowl, beat well, add one cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of water, beat well, then add the dry ingredients, beating well. Lastly, add two teaspoonfuls of hot melted butter with any flavoring desired, such as lemon extract, grated lemon rind or a bit of lemon and vanilla. Bake in a moderate oven 45 minutes.

Cut off the browned edges, lay the cake on a powdered, sugared cloth, spread with jelly or jam and roll up. Leave in the cloth for a while after rolling.

Foods for Occasions.

With cantaloupes so plentiful prepare a cocktail of ripe balls of muskmelon. Fill tall sherbet glasses with the balls, cover with a chilled sirup of canton ginger or a lemon sirup, with a bit of the grated rind. Garnish with sprigs of mint.

Guinea Chicken With Virginia Ham.—Remove the breast meat with the wing joint attached from a young guinea fowl. Place the breasts in a baking dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper, brush over with cream and dredge with flour. Add one-fourth cupful of fat salt pork cut into cubes and bake in a hot oven for 30 minutes, basting three times with the fat in the pan.

Arrange diamond-shaped pieces of toast on a platter, cover with thin slices of Virginia ham broiled and hot. Place the breasts on the ham and serve with the bone covered with a paper frill. Make a gravy from two tablespoonfuls of fat in the pan and three tablespoonfuls of flour, brown and add one and one-half cupfuls of stock made from the remainder of the fowl. Season well and pour over the chicken. Serve with potato balls and piles of green peas in heaps around the chicken.

Snowflake Biscuits.—Scald one cupful of milk over hot water, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of corn sirup, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of shortening. When lukewarm add one yeast cake dissolved in a fourth cupful of water and one and one-half cupfuls of flour. Beat all together until light. Add one and one-half cupfuls of flour or just enough to knead without sticking. Knead until well mixed, then set to rise in a warm place. When double its bulk toss on a floured board, roll gently until half inch thick, cut with a small biscuit cutter, place on tins, cover with a pan to keep airtight and let rise again. When double in size bake in a hot oven. Brush with melted butter just before taking from the oven.

Sports of Nations

Persian Wrestlers.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

EACH recurrence of the Olympic games shows a growth of the play spirit among the nations and a greater recognition of the value of games as a training for life. Games played a big part in maintaining the morale alike of civilians and soldiers during the World war; and from this experience has come a renewed realization that the slowness that win wars are just as needful for the vigorous, bloodless battles of peace.

Back home, before the war, America had contributed two new things to sport: baseball and the city playground.

It has been noted that sports of a nation afford an almost invariable barometer of its progress in civilization. Baseball is one of the most complicated and highly organized pastimes known to any people. It is a veritable instrument of the most delicate precision in the world of sport. A South Sea islander no more could play it than he could operate a typewriter or deftly handle the paper money in a bank teller's cage.

Yet the instincts baseball satisfies—the zest of racing to a goal ahead of the ball, the deep satisfaction of diverting a swiftly moving object to serve his own ends, the mere impact of the speeding sphere against the instrument he controls, bagging the spheroid as it flies afield, the suspense of nine men as they await the batter's fate—each and all find their counterpart in play as old as animals that walk on two feet and have enough gray matter atop their spinal columns to control nature's laws for their human purposes.

The foot-race ever was the most popular of the 24 Olympian events. The Romans batted balls with the forearm swathed with bandages, and the Gilbert Islanders wrap coconut shells with cord so they will rebound to a blow from the open palm; Homer's princess of Phaeacia is represented in the Odyssey as jumping to catch a ball tossed by her maids of honor; and the Chinese had a game in which a suspended ball was kept hurtling to and fro by blows from the players.

America has been among the leaders in her attention to children's playgrounds. In fact, playgrounds for children may be considered the distinctive contribution of this country to the world's play.

Playgrounds in Cities.

To gather statistics of play is like counting the sands of the sea or the children of the nation; but it is significant of the awakening interest in play to note that even by 1918 more than 400 cities maintained nearly 4,000 playgrounds, and the children who found relaxation on 340 of these playgrounds from which reports were had on any one day would have numbered scarcely less than the total population of Boston. Each year since has seen an increase both in the cities having playgrounds and in the total of play spaces.

Moreover, this is but a fraction of the opportunities for normal play, for it does not take into account the thousands of boys' clubs and provisions for their special clientele which churches, parishes, private schools and organizations like the Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts, Knights of Columbus and numerous others make. One of the most characteristic adjuncts of the American school, city, town or country district is its playground; and few are the city parks where the old "Keep Off the Grass" signs have not been superseded by invitations to play, and special provisions for games.

For one who would study the derivation of games, the average playground, no matter how crude, is a veritable museum of archeology. Tools and weapons of one age frequently become the playthings of the next; and centuries later, when adults have deserted the sport, children adopt it.

Game-hunting marked an important development in the life of primitive races. The Indian who stalked deer, the Semang black man who tracked snakes, the naked savage who hunted the rhinoceros, snared wild birds at their drinking places, and trapped the tiger were not out for a summer's sport.

Ingenuity in Hunting.

Methods of hunting were exceedingly primitive at first, but some tribes early developed an amazing technique. The Eskimo would wrap himself in skins and lie by the hour alongside an ice-hole to harpoon a seal. The Tarah-mares of Mexico felled trees by the score to get squirrels occasionally caught as the trees fell.

More ingenious were the Tasmanians, who would clear a forest oasis by burning, wait for the grasses to grow and attract animals, and they would set fire to a barricade of brush they arranged in the meantime, with exits near which they would take their stand and spear the frightened animals as they sought to escape.

Some African tribesmen camouflaged their spear-heads with bird feathers. Fuegians attained a low visibility by daubing themselves with mud and clay. Florida Indians donned skin and horns of deer to enable them to approach their prey.

Ways of setting traps for animals and of poisoning spears were known thousands of years before Christ. The sportsmanlike Greeks shrank from use of poisoned darts in warfare for the same reason that they regarded archery as a savage practice in combat. Even in war they declined to use instruments which would give one side an unfair advantage.

It was long before the horse, ridden so skillfully by the Arab and the Moor, became either a beast of burden or man's plaything at the races. And whatever the civilized opinion of bull-fighting, that sport is a far cry from either the combat to death of human beings or the lack-sport diversion of watching two animals tear each other to pieces. The Spaniard will defend his national pastime by citing that the matador runs a far greater risk than the hunter of the biggest game, with the advantage of his firearms.

Horse-racing is another sport that dates back to remote antiquity. Probably the French were the pioneers in turf sport as practiced in modern times, but it was natural that the English, with their love of outdoors and of animals, should have cultivated the horse for the race as they did the dog for the hunt. James I seems to have been the first royal patron of racing.

Boxing and Wrestling.

Boxing and wrestling are the more humanized forms of individual contests of strength. Naturally the program of the original Olympic games, veritable encyclopedias of ancient sports, included boxing and wrestling. Moreover the Greeks had one game, the pancrace, which combined both.

Wrestling, at least, is much older than Greece, as indicated by the bouts pictured on tombs along the Nile.

In Greece, boxing fell into disfavor in Sparta for an unusual reason. The Greeks had developed sportsmanlike rules for the game, eliminating kicking, biting and ear-pulling, and the bout closed when one boxer admitted his defeat. Lycurgus held it improper for any Spartan to acknowledge defeat, even in a game!

The Japanese have been devoted to both sports for ages. Sukune, Hackenschmidt of Nippon, in the days when John was foretelling the coming of Christ, was defied, and from wrestling jui-jitsu evolved. Boxing today is extremely popular throughout the empire.

Jack Broughton, English "father of boxing" as it is practiced today, is believed to have invented the modern boxing glove and the division into rounds, but he scorned to train in order to meet a butcher named Slack, who belied his name with a blow like a cleaver, and put the idol of British sport in the ex-champion class.

A writer of the sixteenth century called football a "devilish pastime" and charged it with inciting "envy and sometimes brawling, murder and homicide."

Nevertheless, by the time of Charles II football had become firmly established at Cambridge. It was ever held in high esteem in Ireland. There, when all other sports were prohibited for archery's sake, "only the great football" was exempt. Women joined with the men in playing it on Shrove Tuesdays. So many participated that few knew the whereabouts of the ball. An expedition which not so long ago aroused a furore in the American sporting world, was adopted by a player, who shook out the shavings with which the balls of those days were stuffed and carried it under his shirt to the goal.

Abandoned as a general pastime because of its roughness, it was retained in colleges until, with the past half century, it sprang into renewed popularity in greatly modified form.

The British carried football into Jerusalem when they recovered the sacred city. Missionaries have taught it to heathen tribes.

INTERDEPENDENCE DAY

Another holiday is suggested by an international association, which would have all the English-speaking nations of the world celebrate June 15 as Interdependence day. This date is chosen on account of its being the anniversary of the granting of Magna Charta, or the Great Charter, to the English barons by King John on the field of Runnymede in the year 1215. Upon this charter of rights, wrung from the king by a display of force, rests many of the fundamental liberties of the British commonwealth and America.

Magna Charta defined certain relations between sovereign and people, established law courts at fixed places, prohibited punishment or banishment except by judgment of peers in accordance with law, prohibited denial or delay of justice, established one standard of weights and measures, and guaranteed other measures of reform in the interest of the people. This charter has been called "the keystone of English liberty," and the laws which proceed from it were naturally transplanted in America, where they still exert a paramount influence.

Proponents of Interdependence day believe that its celebration by all the English-speaking nations will tend to further strengthen the bonds of peace and friendship which now exist between them, and thus have a stabilizing effect upon all international relations.

THE CHILD PROBLEM

Interesting discussions concerning child training marked the recent conference on the subject held at the University of Iowa. It appeared to be the consensus of opinion among the educators present that more rational methods and less sentimentality should be employed in dealing with the young.

Properly understood and properly dealt with, the tendency to independence which characterizes the youth of the present is not to be deplored, according to some of the speakers. Children must be led to do things because they are right and beneficial to them, not simply because someone lays down arbitrary rules.

Summed up, the conclusion appeared to be that the children of the present and future must be governed, if at all, by principles which appeal to their intelligence rather than to their emotions.

By this time Uncle Sam is no doubt convinced of the permanency of most of his foreign investments.

CAPITAL PLUS BRAINS

More than two million stockholders of public utility companies in the United States, not including railroads, own approximately twenty-six billion dollars represented by shares in those companies, according to a recent survey of a leading New York investment house. Other millions of people own shares in railroads and industrial enterprises. During the past few years the number of investors in corporations has increased amazingly, with the result that the enormous amounts of new capital necessary for the expansion of American business and industry have been readily supplied.

But it is not only the peoples' money that is required. A liberal share of the nations' best brains is also lending itself to industrial development. As Professor Carver of Harvard recently pointed out, this country "has succeeded in massing its best intelligence on industrial problems, with the result that we have built the greatest industrial machine the world has ever known."

Added to capital and brains we have this ever increasing productivity of American workmen, who also use their brains. Thus we have a combination which has contributed more to the welfare and comfort of the people than can ever be fully appreciated.

MORE LAWS—MORE JOBS

Thoughtful citizens, regardless of political affiliations, are beginning to sense the menace presented by the growth of government departments, bureaus, boards, commissions and other agencies for the regulation of every detail of our daily lives.

This menace is two-fold. It menaces our liberties and it menaces our material welfare through forcing us to support an army of useless officials. Every new law which is suggested by the professional reformer and busybody is designed to add to this army of political job holders. The burden is becoming intolerable.

This is particularly true in business and industrial life, in which the harassment of reputable citizens at the whims of politicians has about reached the limit of endurance. Speaking to the American Bar Association on this subject some time ago, Justice Sutherland of the United States Supreme Court said: "Never before have the business activities of the people been so beset and bedeviled with vexatious statutes, prying commissions and governmental intermeddling."

Judge Johnson of Idaho observes that "the appetite for minding other people's business grows by what it feeds on, and the result is a swarm of agents, inspectors, detectives and Meddling Matties going about the country harassing, annoying, worrying and bulldozing the people."

Still the busybodies are clamoring for more laws, more bureaus and more investigations, because these mean more political job-holders at the expense of the taxpayers.

ANCESTOR WORSHIP

Honoring of parents or other worthy forbears is most commendable, but the extremes to which some people carry their pride of ancestry is somewhat amusing.

We see many worthless offspring from high-class parentage, while on the other hand many persons born in obscurity have made notable successes in life.

The divine right of kings was founded on ancestry, usually beginning with some political or military upstart. The American "400" was founded on the wealth of shrewd, though uncouth, traders and schemers of the early days.

While in some sections the fetish of ancestry is still worshipped, it is becoming out of date, and nowadays a man must amount to something in his own right if he would be held in high esteem.

As a recent writer has well said: "Humanity's sense of justice would be outraged if descendants of a criminal justly hanged, say three hundred years ago, should still lie under the infamy of that ancestor. Why, then, should glory attach to the worthless descendant of a hero?"

BANANAS IN FAVOR

Whether the song about bananas, which delighted many and nearly drove others to distraction a few years ago, had anything to do with it or not, we do not know, but the fact is that the banana has become increasingly popular of late.

During one month 2,708,767 bunches of bananas were received at the port of New Orleans alone from Central America.

Yet the banana is not indigenous to this hemisphere, but is thought to have originated in India, where Alexander the Great subsisted his troops on the fruit as long ago as 327 B. C. It is said that the banana was first brought to the New World by a Spanish priest in 1516. From that beginning a great industry has grown and continues to grow.

Composed of 5 per cent albumen, nearly 20 per cent sugar and pectose and 74 per cent water, the banana has a considerable nutritive value and has long been the principal food of millions in tropical and sub-tropical countries. Now it is eaten almost everywhere.

PERCY SHOWS HIS METAL

It fell to the lot of Percy Williams, a Canadian school-boy, to prove the outstanding star of the Olympic Games in Amsterdam by winning both the 100-meter and the 200-meter sprints, a feat not hitherto accomplished since 1912, when Craig of the University of Michigan did the trick. Williams incidentally wrestled both championships from the United States and proved his undisputed superiority over a formidable galaxy of sprinting stars representing many nations. His showing was uniformly brilliant throughout preliminaries and finals.

The combined time it took him to win both events was less than 33 seconds, yet the effort he put forth in that brief period lifted him from obscurity to world-wide fame as an athlete.

An exchange suggests that the mixing of the new small currency with the old kind will cause confusion. But only if one is prosperous enough to have both kinds at the same time.

Who remembers when folks used to forecast election results by the length of the rival torchlight processions?

THE RETURN of ANTHONY TRENT

By WYNDHAM MARTYN

Copyright by Baras & Hopkins

WNU Service

As for Thorpe, Anthony Trent had declared that out of the mists of night a ship would come bringing him the poisoner of the dogs he loved. Thorpe strained his eyes until they ached. Then, nebulous, vast and menacing, some great form had materialized itself from the mist and borne down upon him. A leap of amazing agility saved him from being sacrificed on the concrete floor of the bathing pavilion. The ship, aided by the deep water, came on as though the land were equally her sphere.

It was when the crew, dazed by the flashing of lights and the shouts of armed men, tried to leap into safety, that Regan and his allies lost their trepidations and sprang to pleasing action.

Pierre Redlich, alone of the men aboard, was not yet anxious to give himself up to unknown authorities. There were too many men with searchlights for him to assume it was an accidental gathering. His first aim was to secrete the jewels. Then he made his way on deck and ran forward. The moon was, for the moment, free of clouds. The outline of the big white house, the configuration of the gardens, and the depth of the water inshore all pointed to the present danger of his situation. Pierre Redlich shrank back from the rails. He knew of no possible way to turn this unbelievable situation to his own advantage.

When he turned away from the sight that disturbed him, he saw what he supposed was the Evil One himself standing behind him with folded arms. It was a being of great stature, clad from head to heel in black. On its head was the curious cap he had seen so many carnival devils wear. Pierre Redlich was superstitious at heart and he knew, in that moment, there were no acts of good to be found in his life which would help him. His arms dropped to his sides helplessly.

"It is Fate," he murmured, his courage gone.

The thing in black advanced a step and gripped him by the arm. It was a grip of numbing strength.

"You can call it anything you like," said Anthony Trent. Pierre Redlich made no resistance when his opponent searched him for the booty he had so lately hidden. Nor did he offer to struggle. He knew too well the feel of a weapon pressed against his body.

"Come and show me where you've put them," said Trent. "If you try any tricks I shall shoot. I think I'd prefer to shoot, so don't hesitate to cut and run."

"What?" Redlich cried, confounded to discover that the man he had sneered at, had by some extraordinary means, brought ruin upon him. "You would kill me?"

"I'm afraid you are not going to give me the chance," said Anthony Trent sincerely.

CHAPTER IX

The Terrors by Night.

Mr. Glimbert had not been kindly used. When Redlich commanded him to sit alone in the darkness of the hall, and shoot any fleeing robbers he accepted the mission with joy. But he was old, and felt the chill of the night winds. When half an hour had gone by he determined to go to his room and get a heavy coat.

He reached his suite in time to see Mr. Yeatman holding up Glimbert's diamond ring to the light. It was plain the detective had made a thorough search of the rooms. Redlich made a flying leap for Glimbert's legs. Glimbert's head struck the side of a bureau in falling.

When consciousness dawned upon him he was tied, and his jaws ached from the violence with which the gag had been used. So stirred by rage was the old fighter at the indignity that he struggled to free himself with tremendous efforts. The rope was proof against his strength. He had better luck with the gag. After a time he found himself able to use his voice. Into the night he sent yell after yell. The corridors of the silent house echoed his shouts and brought terror to all who heard.

Mrs. Strauss, sleeping in the next room, sat up in bed and listened horrified. Snoring in a twin-bed, her husband slept on. Mrs. Strauss switched on the lights and padded across the floor to the jewel box which, for all its silver beauty, was steel lined and had a combination lock. Nothing of value remained to her.

Natica Grant heard the weird shouts and was instantly awake. She burst into her husband's room and shook him, with difficulty, to a state of comprehension. The yells horrified him.

"Oh, Payson," she cried, "What can it be?"

She called up Thorpe. There was no answer. At the garage all was silent.

"They've cut the wires," Grant whispered. He was awake with fear. In his mind there was only one explanation, Frank Sutton.

"There's some one outside," Natica whispered.

"Don't go," he exclaimed, holding her arm. The sentence in Sutton's letter, "It may be tonight. . . . I may be behind any door you open," inspired him with extravagant terrors. "Frank is out there waiting for the door to open."

"I can't wait here while some of my guests may be murdered," she declared. Natica broke from his grasp and came to the door.

"Who is it?" she demanded.

"Me," said a voice, "Mr. Strauss talking."

When they let him in his talk was of missing jewels, burglars and the shrieks coming from Glimbert's room. Within a few moments Mrs. Grant learned that almost every one of her friends had been robbed. Investigation showed that her own rubies had been taken.

While the company stood in the main corridor, herded together for company in their fears, the alarming sounds of the wrecking of the bathing pavilion was brought to them by the winds from the sea. Then came the savage shouting of men, the mysterious flashing of lights and the noise of indescribable confusion.

They all started when a voice in the lower hall was heard. It was Mr. Brewster. He had called in the local police.

"They'll be here right away," he said. There was now an air of the fighting male about him. "Come on down, folks."

But Brewster lost something of his courage when the sounds of men's loud voices came near. It was too soon for the police to have come.

Thorpe the butler entered first. There was a bruise on his face, but the man he was leading had fared even worse. Redlich had a blackening eye and a swelling nose. Not for years had Thorpe enjoyed himself so much.

"Yeatman!" Payson Grant exclaimed. It was the first time he had opened his mouth.

Then came the footmen and chauffeurs, each with his prisoner. It was difficult to understand what these uncouth looking men were doing in Deal Beach.

To the guests, straining their eyes to see the last comer, it seemed that the devil was ascending the marble steps carrying a suitcase. When it was opened the suitcase revealed not only all that had been taken from the Guggensohn mansion, but also the spoils of other homes.

Payson Grant found none of the prisoners looked in the least like Frank Sutton. He took heart and joined Anthony Trent in a hot toddy.

"Let's hear all about it," he exclaimed. He found himself in a better humor now, for it seemed plain that Yeatman had planted these letters from Captain Sutton. He was glad when Brewster informed him the local police force had been summoned. His one aim now was to rid himself of the menace which pursued him. Natica's social ambitions were of little account when his very life was endangered. Sutton had undoubtedly planted Yeatman in his position. All that would have to come out in evidence.

The police interrogation was not a lengthy or very severe one. Trent was glad. He had not yet made up his mind just how much of his suspicions of Yeatman he would unburden to the magistrate at the hearing. And he could not be sure that the notoriety he had achieved would be worth while. Redlich kept staring at him as though he suspected him. In truth, Pierre Redlich was astounded at the manner in which a single man had taken command of La Belle Alliance and landed him and his gang of toughs where armed men were drawn up for their reception. He knew, of course, that the Anthony Trent whose qualities he had comprehended too late had deliberately set out to give him a poor opinion of him so that he might work unhindered. It was rather too professional an affair even for the luckiest amateur.

But Pierre was dragged away to a lock-up before he could determine what to do. He preserved silence.

It was not until he had discarded his Annette Kellerman and had drunk the hot toddy that Trent satisfied inquiries.

"What made me suspect him first?" I'll tell you. I noticed that he used to go down to the bathing pavilion and make curious signals with a flashlight. They were answered with a flashlight, much bigger than any I've ever seen as close in. I swam around her one night when you all thought I was writing letters in my room. I made out her name and port of registry. Then I observed that she steamed north just before dawn. It wasn't hard to find her in the shipping columns of the morning papers. I motored to the Highlands one day and saw her lying at anchor with the Swedish flag flying astern. An old sailor told me she was waiting for orders from her owner."

"But why tonight?" Natica demanded.

"Many reasons. One was that he has been worrying about this calm weather breaking up. Tomorrow no ship as big as La Belle Alliance will be able to come in close. He had to do it tonight or else give up that way of escape. He was under a great nervous strain, as I saw. Also I followed him out there this evening, and saw him signaling again."

"I played with luck as a partner. The lookout, with whom I thought I was going to have all sorts of trouble, sneaked below to make sure he wasn't cheated of his share in the plunder."

It was seven o'clock when Grant and his wife had seen the last of their guests to their rooms.

"Thank God I can sleep now," he said, going to his own room. "I'm certain it was Yeatman who put those notes under my door."

Natica frowned at the mention of the detective. She had always thought herself a good judge of character.

After appearing at the preliminary hearing of Redlich and his crew, Trent bade his hosts good-by and motored to New York. Although he was anxious to go to Central Park, West, he remembered his new social obligations, and went to the Van Boden apartment, where a Japanese servant welcomed his honorable employer.

Weld had tried twice to get him on the telephone. Trent was glad to hear it. He designed to make use of Weld's friendliness to enlist his aid in a new enterprise. He called up Swithin at his club and made a luncheon appointment for the next day. Then he rang up the Central Park apartment. It was always Mrs. Kinney who answered the telephone. He told her he would be with them that evening at nine. Although he felt oddly anxious to hear Mademoiselle Dupin's voice again, he did not ask to speak to her. She was disappointed when she learned this from the housekeeper. She told herself that his glimpse of tenderness in the gardens of the Grant home was an evidence merely of his sympathy, and not a symptom of any deeper regard.

For the first time in his life Anthony Trent beheld himself honored on the first pages of the evening papers. There was a photograph of himself in polo kit taken with Grant's Deal Beach Four. Another showed La Belle Alliance stranded at the foot of the Grant gardens. She was lying high above the low-water mark. None would have recognized Trent from the cut. Under the polo helmet his face looked black. In almost every story the name of Mr. and Mrs. George Bixel stood out. The average reader would swear that the Bixels and Grants had long been bosom friends. Natica's handiwork, he supposed. The women writers were particularly nice to her.

Trent was not wholly free from nervousness as he climbed the stairs to his apartment. Mademoiselle Dupin would always be to him one of the most remarkable of women. As the "Countess" she had thrilled him. When she called herself Madame de Beaulieu he had admired her beauty and grace. And as simple Mademoiselle Dupin he had proof of her courage and a more intimate notion of her essential quality.

Religious Faith No Secret in Jerusalem

In Jerusalem, the little city of great things, religious observances play a part in daily life unknown in other capitals. Since it is the center of three great faiths and all their subdivisions, can it be wondered at if each faith and branch thereof jealously guards rights and rites acquired throughout centuries, often through famine, siege and untold hardship?

In a modern city, one meets people daily for years without knowing their religious beliefs. This is impossible in Jerusalem. Be he occidental or oriental, every man's religion is known to all and also the fidelity with which he carries out the obligations imposed by his faith.

The religious festivals bring their own pageantry to the city. There are Moslems with their adherents from northern Africa, India, Afghanistan, Bokharu, Arabia, and the Sudan;

Christians of all denominations; Latins, including many of the religious orders and the Uniate churches which acknowledge the supremacy of the pope; the eastern churches, which comprise the Orthodox, the Armenian, and Syriac, Copts, and Abyssinians; the Anglican church; the Jews, divided into Ashkenazim, Sephardim, Karaites, Yemenites, Georgians, and Bokharans. —National Geographic Magazine.

Fault Not His

"We don't understand some of the things you said in that speech of yours," remarked a constituent to the member of the legislature. "Then," replied the member gently, "you should not find fault with me. What you do not thoroughly understand you cannot intelligently disapprove of."

Grafted Gland Makes a Race Horse Big Winner

The spectacle of erstwhile "sawbones" nags' romping home for derby honors may be witnessed if race horse owners decide to put a little pep into their steeds by gland-grafting a la Voronoff.

The Voronoffication of an "oats destroyer" has in fact already been accomplished with brilliant results.

The case in hand is that of Don Zuniga. His owner, M. Veil-Picard, set to win the grand hurdle race of Paris, experimented on Don Zuniga, where there was room for improvement, even if the horse himself could not exactly be classed as a "saw-boner." The operation was performed in accordance with the best rules laid down by Voronoff.

The big race was run at Auteuil. At the starter's signal, Don Zuniga, released by his jockey, went away like a streak of lightning. The twenty-two hurdles were negotiated as if they had never been there to obstruct the way. Don Zuniga won as he wanted. The 5,000 meters (a little better than three miles) were run in record time, five minutes six seconds. No horse has ever before been able to make that time at Auteuil.

Horse owners are enthusiastic, but race courses with coconut palms and other tall timber may see these removed for fear that monkey-glanded contestants will run up a tree at the critical moment.

Former Saints Playing Regularly With Yankees

Down East they call the St. Paul American association club a Yankee farm, a name St. Paul disclaims. But farm or no farm, the Saints have been delivering to the American league pace setters.

Four former members of the St. Paul team are New York regulars. Three others, rated as substitutes, have been used frequently because of injuries to first string men.

Catcher Collins, Shortstop Koenig and Pitchers Piggass and Shealy are the former Saints playing regularly with the Yankees. Shortstop Durocher, third baseman Robertson and Cedric Durst, utility, are the other old St. Paul players with the Hugmen.

Bob Connery, former Yankee scout, owns the St. Paul club.

Hornsby's Main Aim Is to Beat Out the Giants

It will be interesting to observe what kind of fight the Boston Braves can make against New York in the games remaining to be played against that team. Boston's showing hasn't been so good to date. It may be expected to improve. Manager Rogers Hornsby wants to win against the Giants or he will dislodge a lot of deadwood on the Boston team.

If Hornsby is to be boss of the Braves, the owners of the club must come to him to consult him about players. It is not very likely that any more swaps will be made by which Boston puts its strength into the New York organization.

Simmons' Batting Form Appears to Be Awkward

Al Simmons' batting stance is wrong—all wrong. The Polish outfielder of the Athletics swings at the last second with his right foot "in the bucket," and his form appears more awkward than that of a fat man taking his first swing at a golf ball.

For many weary months Connie Mack tried to persuade Simmons to swing in the orthodox manner, but to no avail. At persisted in his bad habits. The other day the best he could do was three home runs and three singles in eight times at bat.

Adrift With Humor

WHY HE SANG IT

While King George III was mad, British society did not look with favor upon the profligate prince of Wales, the heir apparent. After a dinner attended by the prince he begged John Wilkes to sing. Wilkes at first declined, but under pressure gave "God Save the King."

"How long," asked the prince sulkily, "has that been a favorite song with you?"

"Ever since I have had the honor of your royal highness' acquaintance." —From the Diaries of Lord Glen berrie.

"I hope you derived profit from the service this morning?"

"Sir," returned the other, "I drop business on Sundays, and attend church with no hope of profit!"

"Where have you been, Frank?"

"In Manchester."

"What were you doing there?"

"I ran a photograph gallery."

"Did you get anything to do?"

"Well, I should say I did. I put out a sign 'Babies taken here,' and next morning there were four of them left on the doorstep."

Patriotism Not Vanity

Miss Anne Morgan, philanthropist and reformer, said in a Y. W. C. A. address on patriotism in Atlantic City:

"Patriotism doesn't mean bragging and vanity, though some patriots seem to think it does. I often say that it is as bad for a patriot to be vain about his country as it is for a woman to be vain about her charms."

"Yes, that kind of patriot is as bad as Mrs. Exe. Her husband, on a visit down here by the sea, watched her primping before the glass one day, and at the end of an hour he said:

"Heavens and earth, how vain you are!"

"Without taking her eyes off her reflection in the glass, Mrs. Exe answered:

"Indeed, I'm not vain! I don't think I'm half as lovely as I really am."

Quite Simple

An old-fashioned father visited his son at college on a certain big sports day.

Afterwards he was invited to attend a formal dinner. His son at first was rather anxious as to how the old man would behave, but everything went off wonderfully well.

Then suddenly he noticed that his father had poured his coffee out of the cup into the saucer.

"Father!" he gasped. "What ever made you do that?"

"My stars!" exclaimed the father. Just fancy, you at college and don't know that! Why, I do it to cool my coffee!"—Answers, London

PICTORIAL LIFE OF HERBERT HOOVER

No 1

By Satterfield

1. Herbert Hoover's ancestors, of Quaker faith, came to America from France and Holland.

2. They became settlers first on farms in Maryland, thence moving to North Carolina and Ohio.

3. In 1853 the Hoovers migrated to Iowa, where they and their neighbors founded the town of West Branch.

4. Before clearing the land for their farms, these Quaker pioneers built a Meeting House.

FALSE STATEMENT MAY LOSE LICENSE

False statements made by prospective drivers of automobiles concerning their ages, driving experience, physical condition or other qualifications in making applications for license, will result in the immediate cancellation of such license, the Division of Motor Vehicles announced in making public the names of four persons who lost their operators cards during the last month on this charge.

The division, it was stated, is required under the new law to examine all persons applying for an operator's license for the first time, and is handling applicants in all of its branch offices throughout the state at the rate of about 700 daily.

All applicants are required not only to submit to an examination of their eyesight, general physical qualifications, ability to read road signs, and knowledge of the motor vehicle act, as well as a practical test of their ability to handle a car.

It is much better, division officials declare, to give the correct information in the first place, as subsequent check-ups by the examiners nearly always uncover false statements.

At Atlantic City Speedway, between July 21 and August 9, four regular factory production Studebaker President Eights again proved the supremacy of Studebaker in the automotive world. Under strict supervision of the American Automobile Association, two President Eight roadsters traveled 30,000 miles in less than 27,600 consecutive minutes—19 days and 18 nights of driving at better than 68 miles per hour! Two President sedans averaged 63.99 and 64.15 miles per hour for the same distance! All four cars were strictly stock—not specially prepared nor even selected by Studebaker, but chosen at random from Studebaker's assembly line by A. A. A. officials.

Even before this great achievement, Studebaker held more official speed and stamina records than all other makes of cars combined—The Commander with 25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes; The Dictator with 5,000 miles in less than 4800 minutes; and The Erskine Six, holder of 11 official records in its class, 1000 miles in 984 minutes!

Many Accorded Fame They Had Not Earned

The popular belief that Watt was led to invent the steam engine by observing the effect of steam on the kettle lid was described as a myth by Prof. E. N. de C. Andrade in a lecture to children on "Engines" at the Royal Institution, London.

Actually, he said, Watt, as an instrument maker, was asked to repair the model of a Newcomen engine, and by his examination of this he was led to design a more efficient and economic steam engine, in which steam, having been expanded to low pressure in other parts of the engine, did work by virtue of the partial vacuum created by a condenser. It was that principle which was applied in every economical reciprocating or turbine engine of today.

Many other famous discoveries have been called in question, and the claims of inventors and scientists dispelled by the explosion of similar popular myths surrounding their work.

There was a heated controversy as to whether George Stephenson or Sir Humphrey Davy was the first to invent the miners' safety lamp. When the admirers of Davy in 1817 presented him a service of plate those of Stephenson countered with an address and £1,000 in 1818. Henry Bell, the Scottish engineer who placed the first ship, the Comet, on the Clyde in 1812, had to concede priority for the invention to Robert Fulton, an American engineer.

Scorched Feet, but Squirrel Got Nuts

This may not be the time of year for nature stories, but here's one already made. The little girl and her brother had tamed a squirrel. Every morning he came to their house for breakfast of some sort. One day the little girl started to market and the squirrel companionably went along with her. Into the very store he scrambled after her, much to the amusement and surprise of the proprietor, and of the customers. They began to throw nuts for the little fellow and he scrambled after them eagerly. A poorly aimed shot suddenly went into the wide-open door of the low stove and like a flash the little animal jumped in after it. There was a yell of dismay from the onlookers and they started to the squirrel's aid, but he deftly jumped out again, his feet scorched, but otherwise seemingly not much hurt by his jump onto live coals.—Springfield Union.

Maggie's Many Virtues

The magpie, which is quite common on the plains and mountains of the West, has many excellent qualities and as many bad ones. As an insect eater the magpie surpasses the crow and all other members of the same family. Destructive weevils, caterpillars and grasshoppers characterize its insect food, which forms nearly 36 per cent of its diet. The magpie also eats a limited number of small rodents, and as a carrion feeder it does additional good. The magpie has, however, some outstanding faults. It is guilty of the destruction of poultry and beneficial wild birds and their eggs, and at times becomes a pest on the cattle ranch by its attacks on sick, injured or weak live stock. There are times when the birds gather in such large numbers that it becomes necessary to kill off some of them.

Stamped the Letter

Saralou, age four, was on her way with her mother to mail a letter to daddy. As they approached the post office, Saralou, who carried the letter, ran to put it in the box. Her mother, knowing it was unstamped, called to her young daughter: "Saralou, the letter must be stamped before you mail it, or daddy will never get it."

Saralou looked inquiringly into her mother's eyes. Then without much hesitation, she placed the letter on the sidewalk, and with all the wild enthusiasm of a four-year-old, jumped up and down with both feet upon the letter. Thinking it had been stamped sufficiently, Saralou picked it up and said in most assuring and convincing tones, "Muvver, I stamped it; now daddy will get it, won't he?"—Indianapolis News.

Found Antique "Mine"

Much has been said and written about places to go in search of antiques. The American traveler in his enthusiasm for the wealth of supposed antiques which he finds in every English city, is likely to be led astray by the hundreds of shops which lie along the beaten track, and may pass up completely the out-of-the-way places where the real article may be found.

A traveler says that he struck a veritable mine of riches in a little-frequented town in the interior. Going down for golf he discovered a real antique shop "right off the map in the heart of the country."—Antiquarian Magazine.

"Chess?" queried her mother. "But you can't play chess!"
"I know. I wanted to put dominoes, but I couldn't spell it."

SCHOOL TO HAVE AIRPLANE SHOW AT THE STATE FAIR

The Galt school, Sacramento county, which established the first high school aeronautical course in the United States, will have an exhibit of airplanes at the State Fair, September 1 to 8.

This is announced by William Ruthenford, principal of the school, who inaugurated the course and who is chief instructor of both the ground school and flying school. Students registered at the school are learning to fly.

These students will place two large planes—real flying ships—on exhibit at the State Fair in the educational building. In addition there will be an exhibit of plane engines and plane parts.

Many California high schools have inaugurated both ground and flying courses in aeronautics.

Mrs. Gladys M. Petch, of Oslo, Norway, has taught English to Norwegians for three years over the radio. She is now making a tour of America, speaking at the principal broadcasting stations.

That Georgia man who lost his speech while making an airplane flight probably wishes he had let the wife go up first.
